PROPOSED ROMAN CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL FOR WESTMINSTER.

On the 15th September, Cardinal Manning presided over a great demonstration of the laity of the Roman Catholic Church, held on the site of what is intended to be the new Cathedral for the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Westminster. This site is at the top of Victoria Street, near the junction with the Victoria Bridge-road. A large number of persons came to join in processions headed by bands and banners from all parts of London and the suburbs. Cardinal Manning, who was accompanied by a large number of priests, and a number of them as they went away might ask if their parish churches were not enough for them. Well, he was the parish priest of all London, and had no parish church. He was like an admiral who had a fleet, good boats, good captains, a large crew of good men, and was without an admiral's ship. Every vessel needed its parish church, and every vessel needed its admiral. They were bound to build this cathedral. It is not to be finished for 100 years—it might be that there would be many Archbishops of Westminster, but it would be finished if it was not begun, and those who came for it would be the completion of the work. Some who might have been asked to build a cathedral which might cost £1,000,000 to build, but some Catholics would be to see its completion, the children and children's children of those around would see it, and would thank the father for what they had done. He reminded them that the Catholics had built a cathedral in Sydney, and when it was burnt down rebuilt it. What, he said, they had done there, surely the Catholics of England could do once. This could be done by a little assistance. Some might ask why building a cathedral should be to make this sacrifice. He could tell them that he asked the total number of Roman Catholics in England, and the answer was 1,000,000. There was a time when they had no money in their pockets, their wives had no clothes, their children no shoes, and they were in a state of total abjectness, and some of the money they had then saved should go to the glory of God, and thus be an example for others to follow. He then said that the Bishop of London had agreed to give him the site of the cathedral, and he would ask for the special benediction of His Holiness upon the work, and concluded by giving his benediction to the assembly, which then dispersed.

REMARKABLE INVESTIGATIONS.

A learned official of the library at Versailles has been following investigations that would certainly have astonished him if he had been in London. He has been investigating the life of a man named Madame de Pompadour, who was a French mistress of Louis XV. He has been investigating the life of a man named Madame de Pompadour, who was a French mistress of Louis XV. LOVE OF GOD

From the tower that leaps o'er yon steep cliff a brow
We will win the prize that has cost us so dear,
Then to work, old dunn, for our homes and love,
We'll despond no more, but be earnest and bold,
And to-night with no roof but the stars above,
Our dreams shall indeed be colour of gold,
—From the Sunday Ledger.
